are alike beautiful in their infinite movement and variety. There we may observe not only nature, but Nature's masterpiece, man, in action. The results of his past labours are concentrated there;—the future he is now building, is there most definitely foreshadowed. But in all the turmoil bustle and excitement which pervade the atmosphere of life in busy centres, the mighty question of personal health, that sound basis of individual enterprise and capacity is too often forgotten or neglected. Gradually the ceaseless strain tells hurtfully on both men and women. A low instead of a high standard of physical energy gets established, and fluctuating health becomes accepted and inevitable. It is not inevitable, and need not be endured. A few doses of BEECHAM'S PILLS will convince you of this fact. Try them, prove them, and rely on the conclusions formed by your own experience. By the aid of this justly esteemed medicine you can renew your vigour, give tone to the depressed nerve centres, properly and naturally regulate the biliary secretions, ensure sound digestion, and, in a wor l
